The fall of Wintermute, the assassin of Gen. McCook, at Yankton, has been fixed at $5,000, which will probably be furnished.

The conviction is gaining ground that the robbery of the treasury of Jackson county, Iowa, was a sham, gotten up to cover a deficit.

Many of the largest mills and other manufacturing in New York and New Jersey are suspending on account of the stringency of the times.

James Stinson, of Chicago, drove his four-in-hand team around the track at Dexter Park, on Saturday, in 2:50—the fastest time on record.

The President replies that the whole matter will be referred to Congress.

It is asserted in New York that over fifty thousand persons have been thrown out of employment there. One immense manufacturing establishment in New Jersey, which, when running full, employs six thousand men, has discharged all but three hundred.

Corn continues to pour into the country and silver no longer commands a premium. The Treasury to-day begins paying its silver as currency, and next week it ought to try the effect of paying out gold. It is the belief of many able financiers that a well directed movement of that character on the part of the government would reduce the premium upon gold to a nominal figure.

The Journal is foolish in belittling the election of Allen in Ohio. It was a small thing so far as the majority was concerned, the old man barely slipping in, but its moral effect has been prodigious and will give the Journal and its friends an infinite deal of trouble yet. There is danger ahead and the Journal would be wiser to look it squarely in the face, instead of trying to make it appear trifling.

SOME of the New York theaters, finding their audiences becoming reduced to an unpleasant size, have cut down their prices, and it is now possible to get a good seat for fifty cents. The change at once resulted in giving good houses where before there was a beggarly attendance. This is the first evidence of a shrinkage from the war prices, which is certain to come all over the country. Amusements are superfluous, and the first things that can be dispensed with. By and by the tidal wave will strike some other things, and perhaps reduce extravagant profits in some lines.

The French authorities have suppressed a paper which was attacking the Bourbons quite savagely. Rather strange action for a Republic! The Sentinel mistakes, however, in saying that such a thing was never done under the Empire, even Rochefort's La Lanterne being permitted to publish. La Lanterne was suppressed, but Rochefort published it for some time in Brussels, and thousands of copies were smuggled over the frontiers and into Paris. The Empire suppressed other papers, if we remember rightly, and certainly suspended numerous ones, fining and imprisoning their editors without stint.

Our municipal law-makers meet again to-night to attend to the city's business. It is becoming that those who form laws should respect them, and should be the first to uphold them. In the fundamental law, the city charter, is found the following provision in relation to the qualifications of Councilmen:

"No person shall hold the office of Councilman unless he is a resident of the ward from which he is elected; and in case of the removal of any Councilman from the ward from which he was elected, the Common Council shall have power to declare the office vacant, and order a special election to fill such vacancy."

Mr. David Gibson is foremost in all matters introduced into this body. He lives in the Third Ward, but claims to represent the Fourth. It will be seen by the above that he has no right to a seat in the Council.

JOHN C. HEENAN, the prize fighter, once known over two continents as "the Benicia Boy," died of consumption Saturday, while on his way to San Francisco. He was about 40 years old, and particulars of his life up to the time he abandoned the "ring" are known to all who may be interested. Since then he has been "sporting," or keeping a gambling house in New York. It is strange how many athletes and prize fighters who have magnificent physiques and are apparently extraordinarily robust, die of consumption. The cause may be the extremes of living they indulge in. During training for any effort involving a great outlay of muscular strength and persistence, they exercise and diet inordinately, but when having nothing of the sort on hand they go to excesses in the opposite direction. Too much physical culture is as dangerous as too little. In this, as in everything else in life, the middle ground is the safest. "In media tutissimus ibis" is the best rule of life that philosophy has yet generalized.

WELL PUT IN.

In sentencing Cullum for the murder of Schuster Judge Test said, as reported in The News of last Thursday, "that human life was becoming too cheap and of too little consequence in Marion county of late, and something must be done to put a check to such a reckless disregard of life as now seems to exist in our midst." And he enforced the timely sentiment by appropriate action. He sent the culprit to the penitentiary twenty years, upon a confession of murder without malice. It was no more than the offence demanded. Cullum did not mean to kill the man he stoned, but he didn't care whom he struck, or whether he killed or not. He went into a peaceful gathering, made or helped to make a fight there, and in the fight hurled murderous missiles about, to do as much mischief as he could. That he was not a double or treble murderer was no fault of his. How, in any moral aspect of the case, such a homicide may be better than an intentional murder that was not coolly planned, we don't see. It has every element of atrocity in it that the keenest analysis can find in the other, and the trace of a possible suggestion of self-defence is lost in the wanton provocation of the conflict, if it can be called a conflict when all the violence was on one side. We have no sympathy with the feeling that appeared, as we noticed at the time, to censure the sentence as severe. It was just, and we have recurred to it to-day to say a word or two on the effect of such prompt and thorough treatment of crimes against life. If all our courts would push the law as vigorously against offenders, and especially against the paltry defenses and delays of offenders, as Judge Test did in this case, even our tied and crippled criminal law would be regarded as a protection of community. As it is generally administered it is more the protection of the criminal than the public. Judge Test not only applied a punishment equal to the guilt, or at least not suggestively—to other offenders—less than the guilt, but he put aside peremptorily a plea for delay. He pushed the trial, and pushed it home. We say, again, it was well done, and the same spirit fully maintained for a single year, will make its mark on the criminal docket.

But after all, the best that a Judge can do is only a sort of patching of holes, a temporary reinforcement of permanent weakness. The law is in fault, and no judicial energy can wholly or greatly repair the fault. It puts into the hands of an offender, from the time an indictment is returned, a whole armory of defenses, obstructions, of confusions and entanglements, of which the object ostensibly is to save him from the malignity of the power which holds him a prisoner, but the effect of which is to give him a better chance of escape from the penalty of his offense than if he were to throw dice for it. He may quash the indictment for the misspelling of a name, and gain time to get a witness off or let him die. He may change the place of trial at his pleasure. He may obtain postponements and extensions—except the Judge happens to be in the humor of Judge Test in the Cullum case—at his pleasure; for an oath that an important witness is absent is enough, and an oath is no obstacle at all to a lawyer, if he don't have to take it himself. He may have three chances to the people's one to make a jury to suit him. He has all the doubtful laws construed in his favor. He is given the benefits of all doubts in testimony. He must have an unanimous verdict—a preposterous requirement which has injured community more than most of its vices. He may impeach the verdict for reasons that in no way affect its justice. He may claim a new trial, and a second resort to all his chances. And at last he may appeal to the Supreme Court, and get a new trial on some technical point that concerns the justice of his conviction, and the fairness of his trial no more than it concerns the verdict of a Vienna jury on a new pump. This is what the law does for a murderer or thief or burglar or forger. A Court, though it may obstruct a hole of escape here and there, can not stop all the holes, and even Judge Test may see a scoundrel, and a bloody scoundrel too, creep through and get off, while he is doing his best to put a little saving and common sense brush into the gap. We need a reform of the law, and a little closer conformity of the Bench to the spirit of Judge Test's action in the Cullum case.

The Art of Button-Holding.
Diligence, tact, quickness and accuracy, good temper, controlled enthusiasm, the power to do without sleep and an imperturbable digestion, all of these combined in one man, say a civil servant, will no doubt save him from being a failure in his career. But they will not secure him a brilliant or a rapid success. They, or some of them, are among the conditions of success; but they are not the sole or essential conditions. It is well that he should be diligent; it is better still that the great man should think he is so. He may strive much to be quick and expert in his work; but he should strive more to catch and keep his chief's eye. To happen to be always standing where that eye happens to fall; to be ready with his "Here am I, send me," whenever the chief is considering whom he shall employ on a delicate business, and then, of course, to do the business satisfactorily; to be about his patron; to occur to him; to observe him; to oblige him; and so, as he will be surprised to learn that he is about to become the man of whom his patron thinks the best and the kindest in his particular department or profession, and whom, therefore, he means to send to the top of it—this is the cheapest, the safest and the truest art of rising in life; and this is what is ordinarily meant by button-holding.—Saturday Review.

Literary Culture in a Yankee Jail.

Probably few people are aware of the amount of literary taste that exists at the jail, and will be surprised to learn that a larger per cent. of its citizens use the city library steadily, than of the citizens outside. The most surprising thing about it all, however, is the class of books that are sought by the prisoners. They are not restricted at all as to what they shall read. Mr. Rice having furnished them with a catalogue, and the turnkey getting whatever books they may choose—but their choice is almost universally solid reading, such as history, biography, critical literature and the like, while one or two devote all their leisure moments to reading text books of science and language and works on theology. The most striking examples of this latter class are Collins and Cosgrove—both awaiting trial as pickpockets—the latter of whom has read, or rather studied, some 40 books since July, all with one exception, books of this sort, and the single exception was a story of the French detective system, and was the first one taken. The existence at the jail of a desire for such a kind of information is singular, and indicative, one might say, of the feasibility of a reformatory prison system.

Beards and Bronchitis.

Full beards have long been regarded as a defense against bronchitis and sore throat, and it is asserted that the sappers and miners of the French army, who are noted for the size and beauty of their beards, enjoy a special immunity from affections of this nature. The growth of hair has been recommended to persons liable to take cold easily. It is stated that Walter Savage Landor was a sufferer from sore throat for many years, and that he lost the morbid disposition by allowing his beard to grow, according to the advice of the surgeon to the Grand Duke of Tuscany. A writer in The Dublin University Magazine, however, referring to this theory and to the examples cited in its favor, states that he adopted the same course as Landor, for precisely the same reason, and with fair success, but is nevertheless bound to state that he knows of individuals with long flowing beards who have not been saved from attacks of bronchial and laryngeal disorders.

Hydrophobia a Disease of the Imagination.

In his late work on "Influence of the Mind upon the Body," Dr. Luke supports the hypothesis that hydrophobic symptoms are often developed without previous inoculation. In illustration, he relates a notable instance of a physician of Lyons, who, having assisted in the dissection of several victims of the disorder, imagined that he himself had become inoculated. On attempting to drink, he was seized with spasm of the pharynx, and in this condition roamed about the streets for three days. At length his friends succeeded in convincing him of the groundlessness of his apprehensions, and he at once recovered. Dr. Marx, a German physician, writing to The Clinic, regards hydrophobia as a morbid affection of the imagination induced by fear, and in support of his opinion, cites some interesting cases in which persons unaware of the superstition have escaped the spasms.

The Tarantula in Kansas.

[From the Baxter Springs Republican.]
On Sunday last about twelve o'clock, while Mr. Vallier, chief of the Quapaw Indians, living three miles south of Baxter, was going about his farm, he was bitten on the toe of one foot by a large tarantula. He immediately started for the house, but a short distance, and by the time he reached it the pain from the bite was so severe that he was unable to sit up, and threw himself across the bed. The insect had crawled up his clothing, and soon after he lay down it gave him the second bite in the region of the small of the back. This, with the other bite, charged his system with the poison almost as quickly as if by electricity. Medical aid was immediately summoned, but before it reached him he was too near gone for it to do any good. And in the most intense agony he lingered until about ten o'clock that night, when death relieved his sufferings.

Suppose You Try It.

[Portsmouth Journal.]
An ex-engineer of the Eastern railroad, from Newburyport, happening to be in that city not long ago, was impromptu by a poor, ragged woman, who told him a pitiful story of destitution, which moved him so that he gave her a five dollar bill—all he had with him. While on his way to the depot to take the cars for home, a gust of wind returned him a note of equal value.

Morton's "Poor Henry."

[Brazil Miner and Manufacturer.]

The wicked and "venomous" Indianapolis News, is down to the bed-rock on "Poor Henry" Crows, just as he is Morton's immaculate financial pet, and blaring bright jewel, the luster-lit jet, in the Government's crown diadem! It laughs and makes fun of this great money king, and turns up its nose at the part diamonds they wear, and wonders why it is that "Poor Henry" can't pay. And case up the panic that's raging to-day, when in figures he's known so prodigal! The News is a contemptible, inquisitive cuss. Who rolicks and rolls and swells in a muss. Who spreads it on thick or spins it out thin. No matter, so its proboscis goes in. It likely there's to be a small fight!

Mrs. Forest Sinclair is living in good style at Staten Island, New York.

Florida papers demand a canal across the peninsula of that State, if it is only big enough to float a pine log.

Vanderpool, whose trial for the murder of Field, at Manistee, Michigan, two years ago, occasioned so much excitement, is said to be dying of consumption.

A Philadelphia man spent twenty years and $65,000 to leave his son a choice library, and the old man hadn't been dead three months before the library was sold for $13,000.

A domestic in New York stole the entire bridal outfit of her mistress, necessitating the postponement of her mistress's wedding. The criminal got one year in the penitentiary.

For a long time in the South, and now particularly, railroad tickets have been and are used as currency. Two hundred thousand dollars' worth of these are in circulation in Georgia.

One of his friends says in a private letter, "Landseer delighted in color; he would point to the deep green feathers of a bird and say, 'Does not that green gurgie in your eye deliciously?'"

Theodore Formes, tenor singer, well known in this country, and still better known as the brother of the renowned basso, Carl Formes, is at present the inmate of an insane asylum.

Rather than trust two pet horses to the care of strangers while she went to Europe, Mrs. Haggerty, of Lenox, Massachusetts, has had the animals killed. Both were valuable, one costing $500.

One of the most elegant and conspicuous women in Paris this autumn is the widow of an American General who was killed at the battle of Gettysburg. Her entertainments are uncommonly fine.

Serious changes are reported in Boston harbor, and it is feared that unless precautions are taken the sea will form a permanent channel separating the main part of the Long Island from the promontory, and closing Sculpture Ledge channel.

General Custar was a listener at Duluth to a lecture on how to save the Indians. He admitted that the lecturer's doctrines were good for the interior of a church, but insisted that a man could not practice them upon the plains and save his hair.

A family of Spiritualists at Chittenden, Vermont, have been guilty of aiding and abetting a duel between the ghosts of George Dix and Captain Kidd. The mortals present could distinctly hear the clashing of swords as the fight went on.

A sad accident occurred at Viroqua, on Friday last. A young man named Perry Allen was accidentally shot in the woods, while in pursuit of game for his sick wife. The wife has become insane, blaming herself as the cause of her husband's death.

A Pennsylvania clergyman has made a hit by introducing "personals" in his prayers. For instance: "Lord, have mercy on John Shanahan, who keeps a saloon near the old red bridge. Either lay him upon a bed of sickness or have him removed from this town."

Jay Cooke is said to have friends very high in power working to prevent proceedings in compulsory bankruptcy. Neither the White House nor the Treasury Department are anxious to have the secrets of his banking house and of the First National bank disclosed.

The business of catching and fattening pigeons has been reduced to a science, and is done on an immense scale in Ionia county, Michigan, where two firms have now on hand two thousand dozen. They are caught in nets, 456 birds having been taken at one haul this season.

The sardine fisheries in France at present employ 20,000 sailors, and some 18,900 men, women and children on land to prepare the fish for market. It seems that the catch is now diminishing every year, and the almost complete failure of the fish may be anticipated at no remote period.

The amount of timber cut on the headwaters of the Mississippi river and its tributaries, the past year, was equal to 1,579,000,000 feet. This quantity, estimating the yield of pine land at 10,000 feet per acre, would require the denudation of 155,000 acres, or nearly 250 square miles of land.

Mr. Stephen Treadway informs us that his wife has a saddle-mare which was taken from her by some Federal soldiers during the war, and was gone nine years and nine months, to the very day, when she astonished the whole family and neighborhood by returning home by herself and of her own accord.—[Mt. Hartz has produced a new trick in New York. He washes his hands in a large basin of water, throws the contents of the vessel over the audience, and to the amusement of the spectators, they are smothered with flowers, instead of being deluged with water.

Things were affecting at Iowa City on election night. The Press man corralled Brainard of the Republican, the Postmaster, and his partner, in a fire-brigade saloon, singing:

I want to be a granger,
And with the grangers stand—
A homely-headed farmer,
With a hay-stack in my hand;
And anon, his partner, a nice young man,
With a good voice, joins in:
Beneath the tall tomato tree
I'll swing the glittering hoe—
And snipe the wild potato bug
As he skips o'er the snow.
When the Postmaster continued:
I've bought myself a Durham ram
And a gray alpaca now;
A lock-stitching machine,
And a patent-leather plough.

A Hindoo Story.

A tiger, prowling in a forest, was attracted by a bleating calf. It proved to be a bait, and the tiger found himself trapped in a spring cage. There he lay for two days, when a Brahmin happened to pass that way.

"Brahmin!" piteously cried the beast, "have mercy on me; let me out of this cage."

"Ah! but you will eat me."

"Not you! Devour my benefactor? Never could I be guilty of such a deed," responded the tiger.

The Brahmin, being benevolently inclined, was moved by these entreaties and opened the door of the cage. The tiger walked up to him, wagged his tail, and said:

"Brahmin, prepare to die, I shall now eat you."

"Oh, how ungrateful! how wicked! Am I not your savior?" protested the trembling priest.

"True," said the tiger, "very true; but it is the custom of our race to eat a man when we get a chance, and I can not afford to let you go."

"Let us submit the case to an arbitrator," said the Brahmin. "Here comes a fox. The fox is wise; let us abide by his decision."

"Very well," replied the tiger.

The fox, assuming a judicial aspect, sat on his haunches with all the dignity he could muster, and looking at the disputants, he said:

"Good friends, I am confused at the different accounts which you give of this matter; my mind is not clear enough to render equitable judgment, but if you will be kind enough to act the whole transaction before my eyes, I shall attain unto a more definite conception of the case. Do you, Mr. Tiger, show me just how you approached and entered the cage, and you, Mr. Brahmin, show me how you liberated him, and I shall be able to render a proper decision."

They assented, for the fox was solemn and oracular. The tiger walked into the cage, the spring door fell and shut him in. He was a prisoner. The judicial expression faded from the fox's countenance, and, turning to the Brahmin, he said:

"I advise you to go home as fast as you can, and abstain in future from doing favors to rascally tigers. Good morning, Brahmin; good morning, tiger."

A Religious Life Under Difficulties.

[Good Words.]

A lady had gone to visit a young couple of the better class of the poor. They had no children, and the husband being a stoker on a railway they were above the reach of want. Under these circumstances it seemed to the visitor that they might have attended to their religious duties at least to the extent of going to church on Sunday, and she ventured to intimate as much to the young woman, who was standing rather idly at the door. "Will you please walk in till I show you something?" was the woman's answer; and she conducted her visitor to the little kitchen, where her husband sat by the fire. He had just come home for half an hour to have his tea, and was watching the kettle with the most absorbing interest. He was, of course, in his working clothes, and his face and hands were of a deep oily black, after the manner of stokers.

"Now, ma'am," said the woman, pointing to him, "you see that there man; that's my husband, and I'm bound to do a part by him, ain't I?" "Surely," said the visitor, anxious to uphold the duties of matrimony. "Very well, then. Would you like to know how I pass my Sundays? A washing of his! Never a blessed moment has he to wash himself through the week; out early and late, and half of the night, and blacker not any crow all the while. Well, on Sundays it is fitting and proper that he should try to look like a Christian, if he can, so he sets me to it after we eat our breakfast, with a bucketful of soap and a scrubbing brush, and I rub at him off and on all day, till my arms ache, and he ain't much better than he was; and after we have our tea he says to me, 'Come, Sally, have another try, there's a brave wench,' and I goes at him again, and rubs him down till you think a born nigger 'ud come out white; and, if you'd believe me, ma'am, when I polishes him off with a dry towel after he goes to bed, he's only a light brown after all." "What was to be said to such stubborn facts? especially when the good woman finished with the unanswerable argument, 'So you see, ma'am, them as wants to live religiously has best not marry a stoker.'"

A Scene Induced.

A writer in the Galaxy for November speaking of theatricals, says that the effort of Edmund Kean's Sir Giles Overreach in the last scene has never been equalled. On one side shrieks of terror, Lord Byron in convulsions, the house on foot frantic with enthusiasm; on the other, the leading lady in a swoon, another actress weeping aloud, and the veteran Munden, who was playing Marfall, for the moment paralyzed with astonishment.

Michael Angelo's Effects.

Michael Angelo's family having died out this year, their papers have become the property of the Italian government, and all the commentators on the great man's paintings, statues and poems are anticipating a rare treat from their publication. Professor Milanese has been intrusted with the duty of editing them, and the fourth centenary celebration of the maestro's birthday (March 6, 1875,) has been fixed for the day of their appearance.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE CHARACTER OF ST. PAUL. By J. S. Howson, D. D., Dean of Chester. New York: Dodd & Mead. For sale by Bowen, Stewart & Co. $1.75.

This is a series of five thoughtful lectures by the learned Dean of Chester on the character of St. Paul, embracing his tact and perseverance as the most obvious points in his character, his tenderness and sympathy, his conscientiousness and integrity, thanksgiving and prayer, and his courage and perseverance. The subject is treated in an able and vigorous manner, showing a keen power of analysis and thorough comprehension of one of the grandest characters of the New Testament. It is supplied with copious notes and references, is printed in clear type on heavy tinted paper and is elegantly bound.

AGAINST THE STREAM. By the author of the Schonberg-Cotta Family. New York: Dodd & Mead. For sale by Bowen, Stewart & Co. $1.75.

The same simple artlessness of narrative and strong individualization that made the Schonberg-Cotta Family so popular runs through this volume. It has also the same steady current of moral and religious feeling. In all else it is unlike that work. It is as thoroughly English as that work, German, and is, as its subtitle says, "the story of a heroic age in England," the time being the early part of the present century, closing with the battle of Waterloo. It is beautifully printed and bound.

THE LIQUOR LAW.

Lecture by J. H. Baylis last evening.

The announcement that Rev. J. H. Baylis, of Roberts Park Church, would deliver an address bearing upon the recent action of the Supreme Court in declaring constitutional what is known as the Baxter Liquor Law, attracted quite a large house last evening notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. The substance of his remarks were:

The decision of the Supreme Court does not necessarily do away with the evil, but it places a powerful weapon in the hands of the people, which, if properly exercised, can not fail to be conducive of great results. We can not place much dependence upon the politicians as a class, for aid. They must watch for and anticipate public opinion, which is proverbially as fickle as the winds. Neither can we depend much upon the secular press. When the law was passed, and when it was declared constitutional, the various newspapers duly announced the fact and then informed the public that it was a difficult matter to handle, and accordingly did not handle it. One great difficulty we have to contend with is in finding persons interested enough to prosecute those violating the law.

If the law fails it will not fail because it lacks the elements of strength, but because of the indifference and carelessness of those who should be its most earnest supporters. It is not a Democratic or a Republican law, but is simply the outgrowth of public sentiment, and should meet with the aid of all persons irrespective of party.

Let us make an active move toward the enforcement of the law to the very letter and we will do more to allay the suffering than can possibly be done by direct charity.

Business Men in Consultation.

Col. A. D. Straight presided at the meeting of business men held in the Board of Trade rooms Saturday evening, and Hon. Cyrus T. Nixon acted as secretary. There was a very general discussion upon the financial situation of the country.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to correspond with members of Congress and business men throughout the country, and solicit their co-operation in bringing about the proper legislation to relieve the business of the country from the present pressure.

The second resolution was agreed to sufficiently to appoint a committee of conference which was made to consist of Col. A. D. Straight, Captain W. D. Wiles and N. S. Byram. So far as expressed by the majority of the speakers, the meeting was largely in favor of a still greater intimation of the currency; the opposite to this only being opposed by Hon. Wm. English and Judge Gordon.

How to Live Economically.

The problem of how to economize in living is one that engages the serious attention of a great many people. "Many a little makes a mickle" was one of Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard" truisms that summarizes the whole system of popular extravagance. If you wish to save money, economize in little as well as in large items of expenditure. For all the household purposes for which polishing powders, bath brick and soap are usually used, excepting the one thing of washing clothes, Ecopolo is by many times the cheapest article that can be employed. To say nothing about its great superiority to all other substances, it is, on the score of money alone, by far the cheapest. Remember this fact and save many dollars every year.

Tremendous assortment of hosiery of every description at bargain prices for full dress, street, travelling, driving, etc.; also, full and winter millinery for ladies, misses and children, including hats, bonnets, trunks, flowers, ribbons, ornaments, etc. This department is complete in all its details, at all times. All ladies of Indianapolis and vicinity should give Conary's, 42 South Illinois street, a call for it is at this establishment where all these goods are to be had in great quantities.

PRIZE FIGHTING.

One of the Principals Arrested—The Others at Large—A City Councilman an Eye-Witness.

Yesterday west of White River, and near the line of the Vincennes road, the Sabbath was disturbed and the city disgraced by a prize fight between George Haven, of the rolling mill, and Joseph Miller, employed at the Bates House, in which three rounds were fought and the contest terminated by Haven throwing up the sponge. The fight is said to have been witnessed by one hundred spectators, among them Councilman Reagan, of the Fifth Ward, and to-day the police are busy securing names in order to have every one brought to trial. Haven was arrested last night by Lieut. Campbell and his posse, and this morning before the Mayor pleaded guilty to assault and battery, but not to prize fighting; and for this reason further trial was continued until to-morrow.
Defendant was allowed to make a statement before the Court, which he did to the effect that "Al. Blake egged on the mass," and that the difficulty first originated because Miller had told him in confidence that he was an escaped inmate of the penitentiary, and afterwards accused him of violating the secret.
They went over the river to have a peaceable kind of a fight, because Miller threatened to whip him on sight if he didn't go,
and at the first Miller tapped Haven on the mouth, knocking loose three teeth. Haven was satisfied with this lick, and was willing to quit, but he was called a coward and forced into the second round, which ended in both falling. To use Haven's language, on the third, "I tapped him on the forehead, which kinder slid off, and then he slammed me on the face," and that ended
it. Other parties state that after this "slam in the face," Haven swore this wasn't his day, "it was too wet," and squealed against all further blows. Before the fight had terminated yesterday Officer Preston, Anderson and Buser received notice, but before their arrival at the Vincennes bridge the disgraceful quibble had ended and the combatants run off to their respective homes. It is also said that the Long Branch gang of prostitutes were present as witnesses, and other dens along the canal turned out to swell the pageant. The police owe it to themselves and the courts likewise, to see that every one concerned in this outrageous business, whether principals or witnesses, should be immediately and forcibly brought to justice. It is a shameful thing, in whatever light viewed, and for which there is no palliation.

The Cost of Imperipience.

Some months ago Dore Austell, in the employ of Colonel Gray of the Spencer, absconded a chest of valuable carpenter tools and pawned it for $50 at Lyon's, from where it was afterward recovered. On Saturday night Officer Sam Buser identified Austell at the Metropolitan and arrested him, but on appearing before Colonel Gray the officer was told to drop the prosecution as he had no wish to appear. Upon hearing this Austell broke out in most violent abuse of both the landlord and Buser; which irritated the first to such an extent that he ordered the prosecution and confinement of the thief. This morning Austell waived examination and was sent to the Grand Jury, and he now stands 100 per cent. of going northward for a term of years.

The newly elected County Commissioners,
Jameson and Howland, take their seats next Monday.

While there may be chances of verifand rumors of wars, some will say that we are on the verge of financial ruin, while the face of all these agitations and conditions, it is advisable for every one to have their property insured in a safe and reliable company like the Home Fire Insurance Company of New York, John R. Childers, city solicitor.

REVOLUTION IN CHAIRS.

We wish to call attention to our Perforated 3-Ply Veneer Chairs.

Made by gluing Veneers together, so that the grain of each layer shall cross the grain of its neighbor.

By this device we have an ornamental, comfortable and cleanly seat at about the cost of cane.

Introduced to the public less than one year ago,
they have received the most flattering notice, not only from scientific bodies and experts, but the people turn to them with a hearty welcome, glad to find such a beautiful successor to the cane seat with its long list of objections.

These new and beautiful Chairs and Rockers need but to be seen to secure admiration. They are new, not only in appearance, but in plan and construction also. One piece of our three-ply Veneer forms the seat and back, which fit the person in the most acceptable manner. By this plan we secure unusual strength, as well as comfort and beauty, with the least possible weight of material.

Extract from Judge's Report at the last Exhibition of the American Institute, held at the City of New York, October, 1872: "The Perforated Chair and Settee Bottoms are almost indestructible by ordinary use, and are cleaner, cooler, and far superior to either wood or cane bottoms. They are recommended for special mention or a special reward." Made only at the
